NOTES AND COMMENTS

(2 Sain, 9.) One of the many indications of Havid's generosity and trueheartedness is found in his kindness to Mephibosheth, the crippled son of his friend Jonathau. An ordinary orienial monarch of David's time would have exterminated the family of the former klng, root and branch. David did not do so, but sent across the Jordan to 1.0debar, where Mephibosheth was living in concealment, and brought him to Jerusalem with great honor, restoring to him the rich lands of Saul which had been confiscated, and added him to the constantly incressing number of courtlers who enjoyed the king's favor

In connection with this slory of the sln and repentance of Israel's greatest king, we study the marvelous prayer for pardon in the Flity-first Psalm. It is not known who wrede this Psalm, but it fits David's circumstances so fully that many suppose I was written by him after the visit of Nathan. In its words the penllence and aspiration of those who have done wrong have found expression through all the centuries to the present time. is there not a place for the confession and prayer of the first few verses in very Christian experience?
